There are many ways to define a person and their identity. I chose to define myself through what aspects of my identity influence my life. My queerness affects who I like, and sometimes how people treat me. My Jewishness comes from a cultural and ethnic standpoint, but not a religious one. My interest in theater has been a long–lasting aspect of myself; I've been doing it since 5th grade and haven't stopped since then. My interest in STEM is what guides my career choice and what I'm studying. My being a New Yorker affects how and where I live. My love for nature keeps me coming back to hiking often; nature is where I can feel truly tranquil. My love for opera, especially for old-school singers such as the pictured Oralia Dominguez, allows me to experience the height of dramatic expression.

"That Funny Feeling": The first time I heard this song by Phoebe Bridgers, I was in a painting rut and honestly felt really discouraged artistically. But after I read the lyrics of the song, I was filled with "that funny" feeling" of reminiscing on my childhood. Willow trees, the view from my window, awkward birthdays, my dog, Alice in Wonderland, Molly From The Big Comfy Couch, feeling like an imposter, glamorizing the mouse in my wall, my town, and my body image have all been defining parts of my childhood. These "things" make me feel a comforting, familiar breeze and remind me of what makes me who I am. I think these images show who I am.

The Stories of US!!

1 th

overall.

This zine tells the story of a college freshman who goes to school in the bustle of New York City.

My identity is multi-faceted and contains both acquired and inherited traits that individualizes me as a human in society. As a visual learner, I felt that it would be most appropriate to share aspects of my identity through a collage of images all compiled into one space. The inherited parts of my identity would be my ethnic background as an Albanian from Montenegro and how being Albanian in another country influences the particular traditions and words passed down from one generation to the next. I am also a Muslim woman and my family has followed the Islamic faith for many generations since it was introduced to the Balkans by the Ottoman Empire. I am also part of a large family that immigrated here for the "American Dream" and this makes me the first in my family to go to college on both sides of the family. Aspects that I have acquired on my own through life's experiences would be my love for the sea, pink roses, running in nature, baking and my favorite coffee of all time: Starbucks' oat milk shaken espresso. One important acquired trait is my career path of medicine and wanting to give back to the world through this career and I find this to be more of a future goal for myself that takes up a large part of my identity currently.

ABOUT MATTHEW

My name is Matthew Wassif. My friends call me Matt even though my mom hates that nickname. I currently live in Brookly, NY with my family, but am dorming during the school season

Frowing up as a mixed child I struggled with my identity and which "side" I nore associated myself with. To save nyself the explanation, whenever someone would ask I would just say that was Egyptian, not including the Colombian heritage that I have. I am proud to be surrounded by both Arab and ispanic cultures, and learned that I should not be shy about who I am and to leave out important parts of myself for the "conveinicence" of it.

I come from a pretty big family. I have 3 older brothers, one younger sister, and my perfect cat zoe. One important thing about me and my identity is how much of a family person I am. While I do appreciate the time I have alone and with my friends when dorming, nothing can take away from the enjoyment I have spending time with my family and playing games, watching movies with them, and being with them

Overall, I like to thing that I am a hardworking and pretty average person. I am still sorta figuring out what I want to do with my life, and figuring out who I am, my likes and my dislikes, but I think that is part of the journey and I am just trying to live each day of my life with happiness and improvement. I am pretty satisfied with where am I am in life right now and pray that each day is better than the next.
